ON THE PROBLEM ON EARLY MEDIEVAL POPULATION ORIGIN OF THE SOUTH OF EASTERN EUROPE
AND THE ROLE OF SARMATIAN GROUPS IN ITS ETHNOGENESIS

M.A. Balabanova

The hypothesis of Russian historiography on sarmatian participation in ethnogenesis of population of Medieval Eastern Europe is verified on the basis of solid craniological material. Applying methods of simple and multivariate statistics the author brings clearly out the absence of genetic roots between late sarmatian population and nomadic groups of the Early-turkish and Hasarian periods in the area of the Lower Volga, Lower Don and Crimea, but underlines the presence of an alanes component of the saltovo-majatskih complexes and alanes Caucasus groups in early-medieval period.

Key words: late Sarmatians, anthropological material, Hazaria time, Early Turkish time, chronological groups, morphology, early Iron Age, sokolov type, zlivkin type, late sivashovka type.*

WORKFORCE ISSUE FOR THE SOCIALIST REVOLUTIONARY PARTY

D.A. Mestkovsky

In historiography of the socialist-revolutionary party the peasantry and land-socialization issues were mainly in the center of attention, whereas the workforce and factory and plant-socialization issues escaped their consideration. The deviation from the initially declared principles of democracy led to the «centralization oriented program», that is, the solution of the «workforce» issue was associated with the state authority to grant rights rather than the self-organization of the industrial proletariat.

Key words: social-revolutionaries, socialist-revolutionary party, esery, socialization, Chernov.
